This allows users to quickly and efficiently convert [ultimately_20_year]Protein stabilization of 2-methylindoles by sulfur-containing protecting groups. Sulfur-containing protecting groups have been incorporated into the A-ring of 2-methylindoles, thus permitting the isolation of the L- and D-stereoisomers of the c-isomer of the benzoquinolizidine alkaloid anagryne. The reactions involved in the formation of these heterodimers are discussed and suggest that the difference in reactivity of these benzoquinolizidine alkaloid isomers has its origin in the presence of the sulfur-containing protecting group and that the major mechanism for the formation of these compounds involves attack of a pyrrolidine on an indole N-H bond and subsequent nucleophilic displacement of the benzamide. In the benzoquinolizidine alkaloid anagryne, the sulfur-containing protecting group undergoes nucleophilic displacement to form a 2-methylpyrrolidine ring and
