In I.C.E., you play the role of a female demon hunter who is summoned by The Prime Minister to hunt down demons and destroy them forever. The Prime Minister is more interested in seeing you fight demons and getting fucked by a demon than actually stopping them, so it's up to you to defeat the demons and save the world! Features: - You can jump over different surfaces and drops, exploring all rooms with the help of a broad variety of puzzle elements; - You fight different demonic entities, each with their own fighting style and blocking/counter skills; - You're restricted by a time limit and can select a "trial mode", which allows you to start all rooms from the beginning to save time; - You can grab, throw, pull or break the objects and solve the puzzles in order to complete different rooms in a specific order. This unique and addictive gameplay differs from most other runscars; We hope you enjoy I.C.E. as much as we do! A demo version is available in the Google Play Store * Virtual Reality (VR) is not the same as Google Cardboard, but a different format which uses the very popular smartphone. More info on VR: #vive #google #cardboard #audiencething #demoevent My little jumpscare ~ Shots: 1. A whole bunch of hands reaching out for you, clapping. 2. A huuuuge panting dog chasing you! Thanx to kaileh for the username! Hello, i am test new scene in my adventure into making VR jumpscars, and i just made this one in a short amount of time so im not the best at making things u know, you will need a youtube account and a headset with all its accesories. I like to have you play this on full speed, its the best way to make sure you don't misidentify whats going on, use headphones as well if you can, i have included some idea of what each creature is, but i dont think it would work well for this scene. Its of course big spoilers about the game. If you're new to youtube make sure you check out the best youtube tips here: Join my Discord!

What's new in Face Your Demons:

, Face Your Dog by Pete Hewitt Facing Your Demons - Face Your Dog Every January, in the tiny Christmas town of Fremantle, Western Australia, a 'townie' race takes place on the north-western outskirts of the city. By day, bright-pink bikini-clad beauty-pageant contestants clamour to be the next pageant queen. By night, the streets throng with fun-loving, bikinied revellers revelling in the annual Australia Day fireworks display. After thousands of dollars of prizes, certificates and the promise of eternal bliss, the reality sets in. The locals are waiting. Waiting for the troubled Christian girl, the meth-dependent mamma-beater, the spurned wife, the HIV-positive, in-remission cancer patient, the rebellious drama-school dropout, the moral 'free-thinker', the mother who's been working since she was fifteen to support her family, the monster-truck-driving' redneck drunk, the dysfunctional felon, the unrepentant paedophile. And in the crowd there's always the sad old bloke who's a friend of the family, the cop-baiting trophy husband, the 'brought-up-without-knowing-anybetter', the Euro-trash discotheque king, the schoolmarming pimply teenager with a speech impediment. They all come to the ancients' track to stand before the firing squad of Fremantle's finest. They are interviewed, fingerprinted, photographed, blood tested and arrested. The process is slowed by bureaucracy because the numbers of the accused are so small, but the end is always the same. Day of the Shooting. The execution consists of lying face-down for several hours on cold black tarmac, then the firing squad delivers a penultimate shot. It's no more than token. No more than a slap in the face. Thankfully, no one dies. But they are all screwed. Every last one of them must have 'a known factor', a factor the police know and the courts know and what are they? Other family members, cohabitants, friends of friends, students, work colleagues, cops, workmates, neighbours. The bare minimum is that they all know that there is a 'known factor'. A factor that endangers the rest of their life
